Week ending December 22, 2023

Good news on the economy continued to pour in last week with positive reports on both inflation and consumer sentiment. The headline Personal Consumer Expenditure (PCE) Index fell in November, down by 0.1%, with the annualized rate coming in at 2.6%. This marked the first negative reading since April 2020. Friday's release of the University of Michigan Consumer Sentiment index rose to 69.7, the highest level in five months, as survey participants have started to lower their inflation expectations

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- The bond markets were quiet last week, with the 10-year U.S. Treasury yield staying below 4.0%.
- Other economic data this past week included November Personal Spending, which came in up 0.2%, and Personal Income, which was up 0.4%. Both readings exceeded their October levels.
- Final estimates of third quarter GDP fell slightly from earlier estimates, but still came in at an annualized rate of 4.9%, which was the best rate in almost 2 years.
- With the week's economic data supporting the outlook for rate cuts, the CME Fedwatch Tool currently shows a 75% chance of a rate cut at the March 2024 FOMC meeting.
